National Director “Improving the Health of Native Americans” a Robert Wood Johnson Foundation program. 1989 to 1993

A five year competitive grant program for American Indian and Alaska Native Tribes, designed and implemented so that Tribes could creatively address their health needs and issues. American Indian Tribes were encouraged to submit proposals addressing Tribally identified community health problems and issues. Overall grant program funding was $6 million over 5 years.

A technical assistance and development office established at the College of Public Health, OU HSC managed three rounds of funding. Operations funding over the length of the program was $1.1 million. A total of thirty-six grantees located in fifteen States received financial support to address health problems and challenges in the areas of Diabetes, MCH, spouse and sexual abuse and substance abuse. A unique aspect of the program was the requirement that grantees incorporate traditional or tribal health activities and practices in their projects.
